Adler GUERRIER

Field Guide : Vini kouzen map mennen'w!

16.09 - 29.10.2022

caryl* ivisse-crochemar & [creative renegades society.] sont heureux de présenter "Field Guide : Vini kouzen map mennen'w !", la première exposition solo de l'artiste haïtien basé à Miami, Adler Guerrier, à l'espace d'art contemporain 14N 61W.

Les photographies, les œuvres sur papier et les peintures murales de Guerrier dialoguent avec des réflexions sur les espaces, les rites et les gestes symboliques de la Caraïbe, ainsi que sur le cadrage culturel de ses paysages. Les œuvres reflètent un engagement continu dans l'étude du lieu - ce qu'il renferme - et dans le rendu de ses textures en tant que forme et langage, à la fois littéraire et visuel. Les œuvres de l'exposition considèrent un aspect particulier du lieu, défini par une échelle intime et un usage quotidien modeste, qui devient le site d'un discours soutenu sur le matériel, le social et l'aspiration.

Le texte "10000 daffodils" apparaît dans plusieurs œuvres de l'exposition, en référence aux jonquilles du jardin de Jamaica Kincaid dans le Vermont. Dans son travail, elles semblent fonctionner à la fois comme une critique du programme éducatif hérité d'Antigua et comme un hommage à Wordsworth.

Les photographies représentant la procession des bandes de rara, à Aquin, et leurs adeptes regroupés autour de musiciens en marche nous rappellent l'influence grandissante des coutumes et des rythmes de la campagne, et comment la musique rara - critique, politique et vulgaire - dépasse souvent le village et renforce la localité dans un paysage qui est façonné de manière disproportionnée par le global et le transnational.

"Vini kouzen map mennen'w !", dans le titre de l'exposition, se traduit par "Viens cousin, je t'emmène !". Ce bout de dialogue fait pendant à un moment situé vers la fin de Tar Baby de Toni Morrison, lorsque Thérèse se porte volontaire pour emmener Son à l'Isle de Chevaliers. Bien qu'elle soit partiellement aveugle, Thérèse insiste pour montrer le chemin vers un endroit où elle pense que Son doit se trouver pour faire un meilleur choix concernant sa vie, son avenir et son service à la négritude ; elle l'encourage à courir vers l'ancien et l'enchanted. C'est, en substance, la meilleure façon de naviguer dans cette formulation des Caraïbes, par le biais de la parenté et avec l'aide de ceux qui partagent des affinités profondes.

Adler Guerrier a présenté des expositions individuelles au California African American Museum, au Crisp-Ellert Art Museum et au Pérez Art Museum Miami. Il a exposé ses œuvres au Studio Museum in Harlem, à la Tate Liverpool, au Museum of African Diaspora, au NSU Art Museum Fort Lauderdale et au Whitney Museum. Ses œuvres font partie de collections publiques, dont le Walker Art Center, l'Institute of Contemporary Art Miami, le Pérez Art Museum Miami et le Studio Museum in Harlem.

caryl* ivrisse-crochemar & [creative renegades society.] are pleased to present "Field Guide : Vini kouzen map mennen'w!", the first solo exhibition by Haitian-born and Miami-based artist Adler Guerrier, at espace d'art contemporain 14N 61W.

Guerrier's photographs, works on paper, and wall paintings are set in dialogue with thoughts on Caribbean spaces, rites and symbolic gestures, and cultural framing of its landscape. The works reflect an ongoing engagement with the study of place--what it holds--and with rendering its textures as form and language, both literary and visual. Works in the exhibition consider a particular aspect of place, defined by an intimate scale and modest everyday use, that becomes the site for sustained discourse on the material, social, and aspirational.

The text, 10000 daffodils, appears in several works in the show, a reference to the daffodils in Jamaica Kincaid's garden in Vermont. In her work, they seem to function both as a critique of Antigua's inherited educational curriculum and as an homage to Wordsworth.

Photographs depicting the procession of Rara bands, in Aquin, and their followers grouped around marching musicians remind us of the expanding influence of countryside customs and rhythms, and how Rara music --critical, political, and vulgar--often reaches beyond the village and reinforces locality on a landscape that is disproportionately shaped by the global and transnational.

"Vini kouzen map mennen'w!", in the title of the exhibition, translates as "Come on cousin, I'll take you!". The bit of dialogue parallels a moment toward the end of Toni Morrison's Tar Baby, when Thérèse volunteers to take Son to Isle de Chevaliers. Though partly blind, Thérèse insists on leading the way to a place where she thinks Son needs to be in order to make a better choice about his life, future, and in service to blackness; she encourages him to run toward the ancient and enchanted. It is, in essence, the best way to navigate this formulation of the Caribbean, through kinship and with the help of those we share deep affinities.

Field Guide offers works as discursive positions within the Black ordinary, a space within which blackness burdens under the realities of life and maneuvers enough from it as to be unbound by some of the tethers of globalism, time and history.

Adler Guerrier has presented solo exhibitions at California African American Museum, Crisp-Ellert Art Museum, and Pérez Art Museum Miami. He has exhibited work at Studio Museum in Harlem, Tate Liverpool, Museum of African Diaspora, NSU Art Museum Fort Lauderdale, and Whitney Museum. His works can be found in public collections including Walker Art Center, Institute of Contemporary Art Miami, Pérez Art Museum Miami, and Studio Museum in Harlem.
